As Seen from the Outside.

In future no democratic state convention should be held in Massachusetts without provision for a police court in a room adjoining the convention hall to try assault cases occurring during the deliberations. No less than eight rough and tumble fights ring during the deliberations. No less than eight rough and tumble fights we's counted on the floor while the convention was balloting for governor on Thursday night in the home of the "fierce democracy of Boston." The delegates assembled under the happiest auspices. There had been a "landslide" in Maine. It seemed to be necessary only to nominate a capable and popular candidate for governor, and adopt a platform calling attention to the high cost of living and the "robber tariff." to assure a glorious triumph of principle. The platform had been entrusted to the Hon. Frederic Jesup Stimson, who belonged to the erudite wing of the party, and there was no anxiety on that score. The field of candidates was limited, but enough; the Hon. Eugene Foss, a late recruit from the republican party with as much money as zeal; the as much money as zeal; the Charles S. Hamlin, the eminent tariff reformer and ex-assistant sec retary of the treasury, and the perennial Hon. James H. Vahey, who would do at a pinch. It would have been a love feast if the Massachusetts democrats had put their best foot forward, as their brothers in Maine, Convertigat, New York. necticut. New Jersey and New York has done; but in a democratic con-vention in Massachusetts fists count more than intellect, and there was really no convention at all, which ac-counts for an inordinate demand for tickets to witness the proceedings.

A coherent report of the convention of 1910 will never be written. In the shindy the newspaper men lost their seats and their wits. No eye could follow more than one of the thickening company between members of the follow more than one of the thickening combats between members of the Lomasney and Keliher clans. The chairman, the Hon. John R. Thayer, retained his gavel only by falling upon it. The police were swept aside like chaff. Only the military forces of the commonwealth with ball cartridges could have restored order. All that we can make out of the chaos is that the Hon. Eugene Foss was within a few votes of a nomination when the serious fighting began. There are still unmercenary souls among the Massaserious fighting began. There are still unmercenary souls among the Massachusetts democrats, sturdy fellows who love a fight more than money, who put the man above the dollar. Nature rebelled at last and peace panted into sight. Upon motion of the magnanimous Vahey, whose leonine locks had brought him safely through the fray, a temporary candidate for governor was nominated, one date for governor was nominated, one Frederick W. Mansfield of Boston, counsel for the American Federation of Labor, with the understanding that within 72 hours he would retire in favor of the choice of a committee.— New York Sun.
